Is your car insurance policy about due for a new renewal? Do you, like 23% of car owners, just accept the quote and stay with your insurer? Does it matter to you that they increased your premium another five or 10 percentage points more than the previous year? Maybe just think that it isn't worth the hassle to do all the shopping around and researching through the maze of different companies that you can come across via the phone book or just driving around. Most insurance companies will offer really good rates to new customers, so they can have their business. Existing clients generally stay with them anyway.

Have you ever thought about the Internet? Trying it could really pay off. Are you aware that if you shop around, you could save up to 0 or more on your auto insurance plus an additional discount for using the online service? The forms are very easy to fill out and answer, and any claims details that you might need to fill in can be found on your renewal notice.

There are a lot of new categories of insurance that are coming on the market these days apart from your straightforward individual car insurance. Some of the new options include pay-as-you-go, and policies for multiple cars. These used to be difficult to obtain unless you were in the car-trade. With everything going on, it might be time for a reassessment of your insurance policy to make sure that you are up-to-date on the latest offers. A short time browsing the internet will get you thinking along the right lines.

With the rising costs of repairs and materials, insurers are beginning to show signs that they may not be able to continue to hold down prices for very much longer. Claims are always growing. The average cost of accidental damage repair has risen, costing an additional 5% per year, despite the fact that there are fewer accidents. Personal injury claims are also on the rise and the cost of getting those cases settled is rising at approximately 12% per year.

Don't let your current insurer raise your premiums because of all this going on, get started searching and get your premiums sorted out now.
